The Diabetes Health Equity Challenge Teams have been taking action to support their communities in responding to the emergent needs resulting from the coronavirus. This online forum will highlight the shared learning, problem solving, and increased clinical-community connections, and first steps in creating community solutions.

Stakeholders are invited to Join the Rhode Island Diabetes Health Equity Challenge Teams to better understand how:

- Teams are applying population health tools to rapidly assess and address equity issues alongside community partners to create short, medium, and long-term solutions
- Teams have strategically moved to action, learned about the system, and adapted in real time
- You can sustainably address equity by developing a balanced portfolio of action

WE in the World, in collaboration with CTC-RI and RIDOH, have adapted population health tools developed in 100 Million Healthier Lives to improve health equity in Rhode Island. While this forum will focus on people with diabetes in the context of COVID-19, the approaches can be applied to any population.
